

This chart shows citations by time according to information we have. We see strong trends over time with some days showing a higher level of citations. This might be proof of periods of active enforcement, policy efforts, or outside influences such as holidays or public safety campaigns. If we look at day of week, location, or officer in detail, we see subtle trends.

This graph indicates when citations are given at various times of day. Citations are given mostly during the daytime, between 8 AM and 4 PM, which may be due to these being average traffic stops. Less than half of the citations are given late evening and early morning, due to there being less traffic or perhaps because fewer officers are on duty then.
